

A Measure of My Days: The Journal of a Country Doctor

David Loxterkamp muses about his patients, his colleagues, his family and his relationship to his Maker as he recalls the daily minutiae that constitute the bookmarks in a bountiful life, a string of facts and circumstances that have moved beyond the mere documentary to his discovery of peace and perspective and companionship along my muddled way. That way, which is faithfully mapped by journal entries, is populated by the characters he has come to know: the lobstermen, millworkers, church-goers, back-to-the-landers, and those from away who share this picturesque, bare bones, blue-collar piece of Maine coast. We meet Elena, whose fatal Lou Gehrigs disease reduces her speech to air made into letters on a computer screen. Bernitha languishes in a slow death from lung cancer. A laboring mother deals with her pain, uncertainty, and the realized possibility of a deformed infant.
