I have been obliged to make use of your brothers hand, as I write with pain and difficulty, and the Queen has refused to give any, even the shortest, delay. I have the honour to be, Sir, with great regard, your most obedient humble servant. Hutchinson. Mr. Brougham accordingly presented the letter: the moment her majesty read it, she expressed the utmost indignation, and appealed to Mr. Brougham for his opinion. That gentleman remarked, that certainly those were not conditions which he should advise her majesty to accept; at the same time he begged her majesty to consider what conditions she might be pleased to accept. Her majesty best knew what was befitting her real situation. The Queen promptly replied-- My determination is soon formed: I shall set out instantly for England--it is in London, and London alone, that I shall consent to consider any proposals of the king of England. Mr. Brougham, at her majestys request, made the following answer in writing:--Mr. Brougham is commanded by the Queen to acknowledge the receipt of lord Hutchinsons letter, and to inform his lordship, that it is quite impossible for her majesty to listen to such a proposition.--Five oclock, June 4, 1820. Her majesty then requested alderman Wood, whose kind assistance she had hitherto so frequently experienced, to order horses to be immediately put to the carriages, and to despatch a courier to prepare horses on the road between St. Omers and Calais. The suddenness of her departure was such, that Mr. Brougham had no time to follow her majesty to her coach, and indeed scarcely knew she was gone till he saw from a window the carriage hastening away. The reason of this precipitate departure, which prevented Mr. Brougham from paying the res...
