Not illustrated. 1819 edition. Excerpt: ... DELUGE. That ever the whole globe was, at one time, totally overflowed with water, is physically impossible. The sea may have covered all parts successively, one after the other; and this could be only in a gradation so very slow, as to take up a prodigious number of ages. The sea, in the space of five hundred years, has withdrawn from Aiguesmortes, from Frejus, arid from Ravenna, once large ports, leaving about two leagues of land quite dry. This progression shows, that, to make the circuit of the globe, it would require two millions two hundred and fifty thousand years. A very remarkable circumstance is, that this period comes very near to that which the earths axis would take up in raising itself again, and coinciding with the equator; amotion, so far from improbable, that, for these fifty years past, some apprehension has been entertained of it, but it cannot be accomplished under two millions three hundred thousand years. The strata, or beds of shells, every where found, sixty, eighty, and even a hundred leagues from the sea, prove, beyond all dispute, that it has insensibly deposited those maratinie products on grounds which were once its shores: but that the water, at one and the same time, should cover the whole earth, is a physical absurdity, which the laws of gravitation, as well as those of fluids, and the deficiency of the quantity of water, demonstrate to be impossible: not that any thing here is meant, in the least, to affect the great truth of the universal deluge, as related in the Pentateuch; on the contrary, this is a miracle, and therefore to be believed 5 it is a miracle, therefore could not be effected by physical causes. The whole history of the deluge is miraculous.

It is a miracle, that forty days rain should...
